Hastings Man Lends Money to "Officer" With Poor Results

A sad tale of woe, without much chance of being remedied, was told to federal authorities by S. T. Lockhart of Hastings, who came to Omaha and spent several days in trying to start official action against a man who "borrowed" $31 from him and left a trunkful of personal effects as security. A stranger, who gave his name as Olaf

Largen and said he was a "second lieutenant" induced Lockhart to let him have the money for railway transportation to Salt Lake City. Later the Hastings man regretted his act of friendship and deided to prosecute the benefciary of his kindness.

But when he reached Omaha and had interviewed several federal officials, he found he had no case against the young man on the intended charge of impersonating a government officer. It turned out that Larsen, who also used the name of Wilmar, had merely said he had served for thirteen years and was a second lieutenant, not mentioning the army or navy. Lockhart had simply concluded that because Larsen had some sort of uniform and a sword and gun, he was in the government service.

Whaling company in Alaska, and also probably belonged to some uniformed lodge. Federal officials say that the Hastings man's only probable recourse will be to sell the trunk and contents for whatever they will bring.

Theodore H. Becker of Russellville, Ky. has written Postmaster J. C. Wharton asking the river steamboat or barge line price for transporting passengers and a urge auto from St. Louis to Omaha. It supposed that Mr. Becker heard of the advantages of Omaha as the gateway to the west for tourists and trade, and planned to start from this city on a western auto tour this summer. Now that he will be unable to transport his auto this far by water, and as rail freight would be much more expensive, it is feared Kansas City will be his starting point, as there is a river barge line to that point

Commencement at Creighton Will Be April 30 This Year

The annual commencement exercises of the students of the professional de partments of Creighton university will be held at a local theater April 30. For the first time in the school's history, all five departments of the university-law, medical, dental, and arts, will be presented and a combined graduation of from 100 to 200 students will be staged.

There will be no separate graduation held for the art students in June as has formerly been done. Owing to the installation of the four-year college course at the arts college some time ago, the graduation for one year was necessarily lessened and there are but six men to receive A. B. degrees this year. Next year's class is much larger. The arts grads will receive their degrees on the same night as the graduates of the professional departments which conclude their courses next month.

Frank Walsh, chairman of the Commis sion of Industrial Relations, may be secured as the speaker of the evening.
